Tomorrow always seems like a good day to make behavior changes. Many people want to improve their health and finances but, instead, they procrastinate with excuses. Months (even years) go by without taking action. Before they know it, they’ve gained 20 pounds or lost 10 years of compound interest on money that could have been saved but wasn’t.

There is a better way to change...take the time to prepare properly. Lay all your obstacles out on the table and try to overcome them, set a realistic start date or quit date, write up a witnessed “commitment contract” with yourself and then “just do it.” Notice that the “just do it” is listed last. Nike slogan aside, change never begins with action. Rather, it requires a firm commitment to change and a plan of action.

Don’t set yourself up for failure. Start dates (e.g., new diet) and quit dates (e.g., smoking) to take action should be realistic. For example, early December is not a good time to start a 1,200-calorie diet or to quit smoking if you plan to attend social events with others who smoke. Wait a few weeks so you can begin to change with fewer distractions. Go public with your commitment to change. This increases accountability because others are “looking over your shoulder.” Fear of the embarrassment of failing can be a powerful motivator to stay on track. In addition, by sharing your plans to change, you may be able to enlist the support of family and friends.

Sign a Commitment Contract
One way that some people prepare to change is by writing a simple one-page behavior change contract with themselves that includes their health and wealth goals, specific actions they plan to complete, and rewards they intend to achieve. Like a legal contract, a behavior change contract should be dated, signed, and witnessed. The witness(es) can help hold you accountable and serve as a source of encouragement and support. You might also want to use a “tracking form” to note your daily performance of planned activities. A template tracking form that can be adapted is available at http://njaes.rutgers.edu/sshw/challenge/.

Health and Wealth Action Steps This Week

Health and Wealth

Identify up to five small steps (actions) that can be taken most days of each week to reach your health and financial goal(s).

Prepare a Behavior Change Contract, sign it, get it witnessed, and post it in a visible place where you will see it every day as a reminder of what you want to achieve.

Use a behavior change tracking form to record your daily progress toward your health and financial goals.

List the daily actions that you are taking to reach your health and financial goals and place an X in the box for every day of the week that each action was taken.

What upcoming events in your life or in the calendar will affect the start date or quit date for your health and financial goals?

Ask yourself: what will happen if I don’t commit to make a positive health or financial change?
